WASHINGTON, DC (December 19, 2012) - The US Business Leadership Network (USBLN®) and the American Association of People with Disabilities (AAPD) jointly announced today their partnership to establish a national benchmarking tool on corporate policies and practices for disability employment inclusion and accessibility. Work on this important project has begun and AAPD and the USBLN® look forward to launching it in 2013.

"Bringing together the unique strengths of both AAPD and USBLN® will enable us to reach more employers with a strong message and resources for creating equitable workplaces for people with disabilities," said Mark Perriello, President and CEO of AAPD. "This new index will give us objective standards we can use to assist all businesses in continuing to improve opportunities and inclusion for people with disabilities."

"The USBLN® is excited to be working with AAPD, the nation's largest disability rights organization, on a meaningful tool that will strengthen our ability to support businesses to increase their inclusion of persons with disabilities across the business enterprise," said Jill Houghton, USBLN® Executive Director.

The new index - currently referred to as the "Disability Equality Index<sup>SM</sup>" - will provide employers with a transparent, objective road-map for improving opportunities for people with disabilities. AAPD and USBLN® will work with each business to ensure continual progress on the index.
